In the construction of the works necessary to introduce the water into San Francisco, the Engineers furnish testimony that the aqueduct, the reservoirs, and the distributing pipes, may be completed in six months, within the amount of capital. The Directors do not think it necessary, in this place, to point out the manifold advantages resulting to a city bountifully supplied with pure and wholesome water; its absence is painfully felt by more than sixty thousand persons.

No other expenditure of money that can be made, will so rapidly advance the wealth of the city, or add so much to the comfort, convenience, and health of its inhabitants; while as an investment of capital merely, its ultimate productiveness cannot be reasonably questioned.

Twenty-five per cent of each subscription will be required in cash, for which scrip will be issued, and the balance in small instalments, at such times as the Directors may by due notice require. By order.
