NEW ORLEANS, May 2, 1871.

The City Council of New Orleans, at its regular session last week, passed an ordinance making the city in the eastern and southern districts, and it is expected that the ordinance will be approved by the Mayor.

The ordinance provides that the city shall be divided into districts, and that the Mayor shall appoint a Board of Commissioners to act as such in each district. The Board of Commissioners shall consist of three members each, to be appointed by the Mayor, and the Mayor shall have power to remove any member of the Board at any time. The Board is authorized to assess a tax for the support of a Board of Education in each district, and to provide for the support of a school in each district. The ordinance also provides for the appointment of a Board of Education for the city, consisting of seven members, to be elected by the people of the city, and for the appointment of a Board of Supervisors to act as such in each district.

The ordinance has been opposed by many of the people of the city, on the ground that it is unconstitutional. The opponents of the ordinance claim that it violates the state constitution, and that it is an attempt to create a system of government in the city which is not authorized by the Constitution. The opponents also claim that the ordinance is an attempt to control the city, and to prevent the people from having a voice in the government of the city.

The ordinance has been supported by many of the people of the city, who believe that it is necessary for the proper government of the city. The supporters of the ordinance claim that it is a necessary step in the development of the city, and that it will add to the material prosperity of the city.

The ordinance is now before the Legislature of the state, and it is expected that it will be approved by the Legislature. The ordinance is also before the people of the city, and it is expected that it will be approved by a majority of the people.
